

The proportion of working-age people with a long-standing illness varies between a fifth of the population and a tenth in different local authorities

Source: 2001 Census