

Means-tested benefits for working-age adults with no children are only around half the low-income threshold. By contrast, for pensioners, means-tested benefits are similar to the low-income threshold.

For each family type, value of the low-income threshold of 60% of median income after deducting housing costs divided by the value of Income Support / Jobseeker's Allowance / Pension Credit

