On average, people in more deprived areas are slightly - but only slightly - more to be dissatisfied with their public services. The chart shows the proportion of adults who are either very or fairly dissatisfied with various public services, comparing the most deprived fifth of small areas with other areas. The data is from the Citizenship Survey, Home Office, and covers the years 2007/08 to 2009/10 for England and Wales, updated in April 2011.